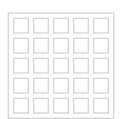

Exhibition Information

Sunset and sunrise in art bring a symbology of cycles of life that close and new ones that begin. Since ancient times, people used to orient themselves by the stars, and often made predictions or sought some form of guidance for daily life, seeking in some way to find the divine and the transcendent through the light of heaven. From God's walk through Eden at the turn of the day, there is something enchanting and mysterious about the beauty of the ephemeral colors of sunset and sunrise.

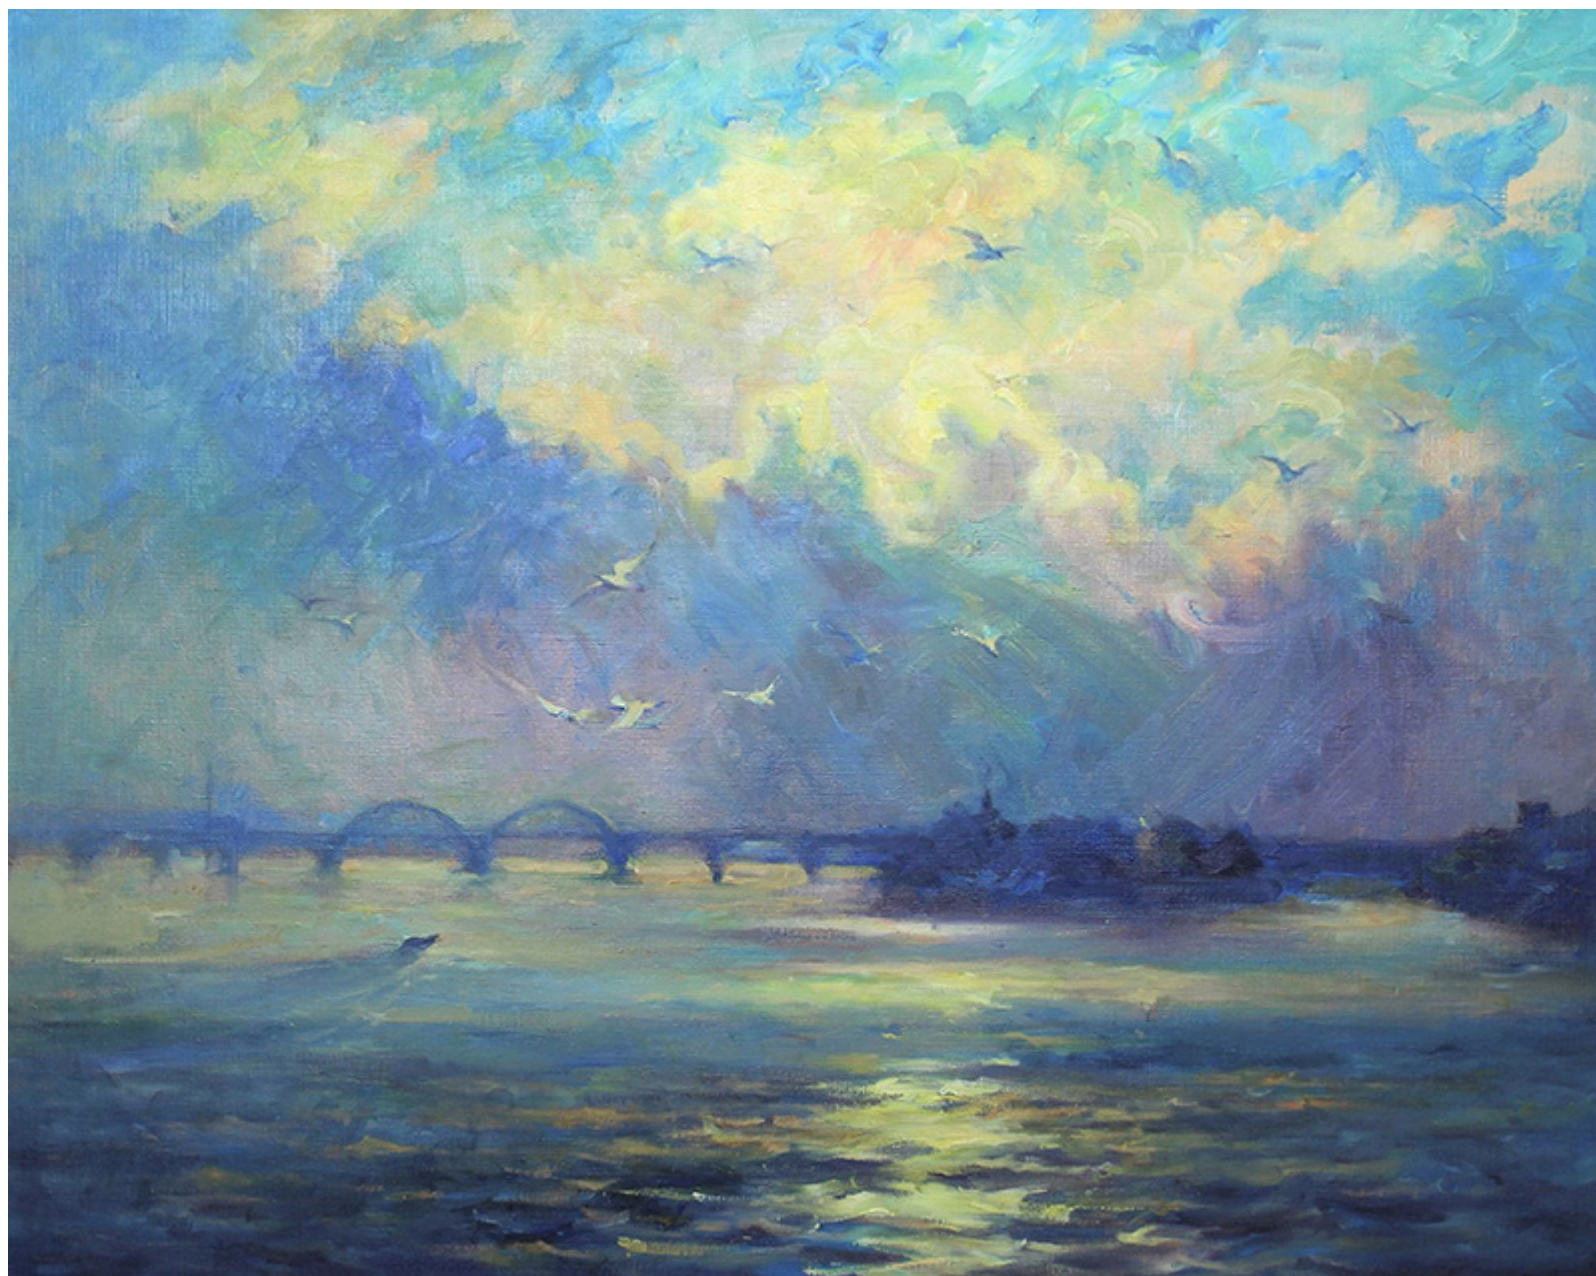

This beauty, which awakens a certain sense of nostalgia, has been the driving force that has inspired many artists in the history of art, and now becomes the subject of our exhibition.

The work was done on medium-grain linen canvas. Framed in a decorative baguette, in excellent condition. Morning dawn, the sun is not yet visible, only in the reflection on the water, the richness of the freshness of the air with circling seagulls gives a good impression of the coming day.

Chincoteague Va wild horses on the salt marsh. I love early morning light . Its much more diffused than sunset and you can see more of the landscape. I love the light being reflected in the marsh water which is what attracted me to paint this image.

The painting depicts a girl standing in the sea. The sea is spread out before her in all its majestic beauty and mystery. The water gently embraces her feet, creating a sense of calm and harmony. An atmosphere of mystery and weightlessness hovers around the girl.

Perhaps she is in reflection, singing the majesty of nature or simply enjoying the moment of complete unity with the world around her. This painting embodies the beauty of nature and the inner world of person, united in a single harmonious image.

Sunsets and Sunrises

The image of dawn and sunset are identical for the artist, other images in the painting tell the viewer what is depicted. Or maybe it's the same thing? Is it dawn in one part of the world, sunset in the other), is everything like in our lives? And yet, maybe it's just a beautiful seascape? Or all together, with meanings and beauty!

Sunset, the end of the day. A time to catch your breath and rest. (Unless you are a photographer). Then you get your camera and tripod after a long day at theme parks with kids and go chasing clouds and colorful sunsets. I was so tired when I get back to our vacation home, but I dug up the energy to take this shot. I'm so glad I did. The colors were just magnificent, and I think my camera did a great job capturing the beauty and tranquility.

"Hurry down, sundown, get thee be gone,
Get lost in the sunrise, of a new dawn.
Hurry down, sundown, take the old day,
Wrap it in new dreams, send it my way!
Send it my way!
Send it my way!"
...Peter, Paul, and Mary

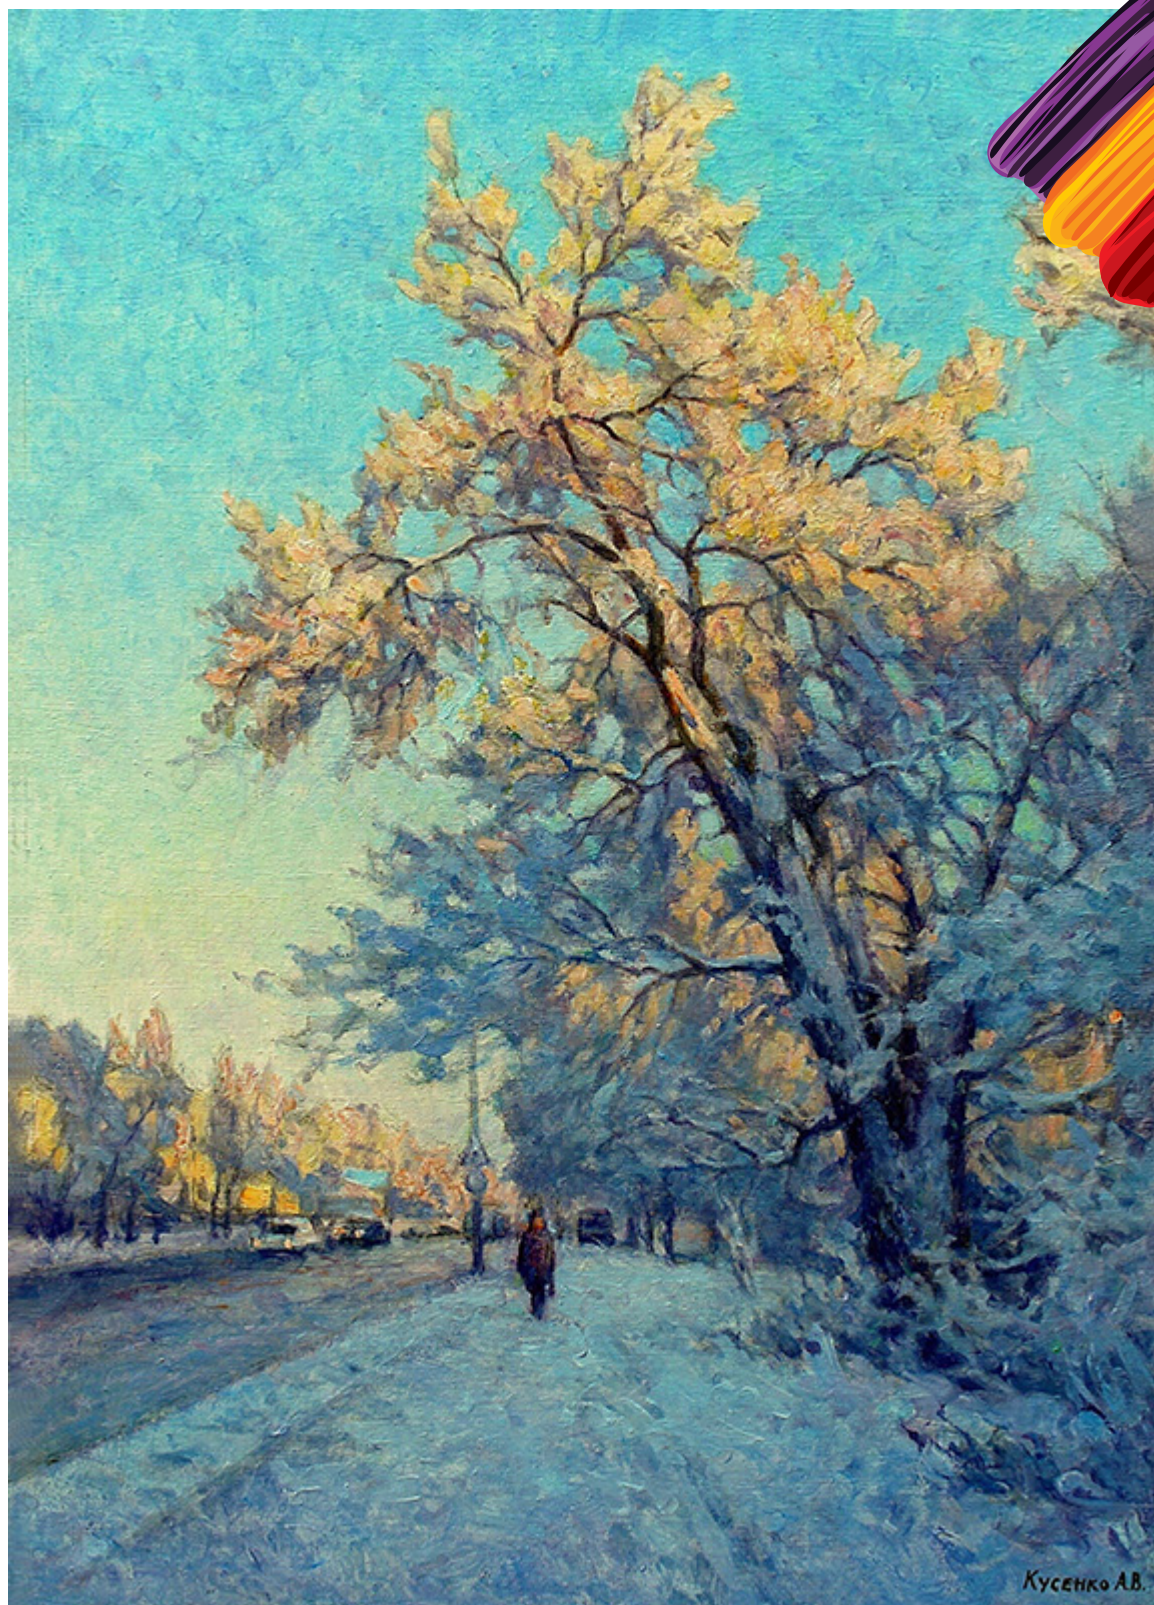

"Sundown" is a painting from a photo taken on the shores of a summer camp in South Puget Sound. Most summer evenings, young voices singing Hurry Sundown are accompanied by guitars, small waves lapping on the beach, and the vivid colors of the setting sun falling behind the Olympic Mountains. The Sundown ritual began in 1970 and continues today, fifty-plus years later! Sunsets have a way of bringing about moments of quiet reflection and spontaneous expressions of gratitude and awe for those who pause to witness their mystery and magic.

When I create Art, I establish a spiritual relationship with Nature. It is She who provides me with my sources of inspiration. From her I nourish my wildest dreams with the images that I later transfer to the canvas. I have dreamed of exclusive sunrises in my feverish mind, eager for originality and uniqueness; sunrises with two suns that emerge in unison and dazzle with their brilliant light; sunrises adorned with capricious flowers that happily greet the birth of the stars. The explanation is that, in my visionary creative world, I establish a friendly dialogue with the painting in process; It is she who advises me where to take the next brush stroke, where to create chromatic contrasts and light and shadow spots, where to create the next enigma with classic or more innovative symbols. It is the budding painting that guides my steps throughout the creative process. I listen to her with careful attention and I trust her wisdom. Here there is the result: my magnetic dawn, with two splendid suns, full of magic, spirituality, mysticism and chromatic shades; being born victorious from the thick flora.

Curator's Note

At the end of another exhibition, I can only thank the many artists who sent their work from all over the planet. I was very admired and passionate about works that captured very well the strength and beauty of the sun in art.

The sunset has always been something very special to me and seeing artists from all over the world sharing this passion with me through paint or photography is something very gratifying and, for sure, a unique moment in my own career as a painter.

It was an honor to receive these works of art and I sincerely wish that you continue to pursue your dreams without ever giving up. I believe we will still see each other, maybe sharing another beautiful sunset. Big hug!
