I think I'm a lucky person. I am one of those people on this planet who don't suffer from the lack of water. I can turn on the tap in my home and have access to fresh water day by day. Who knows how far... However, there are many creatures on this planet, plants, animals, people, who already suffer from drought and thirst most part of the year, and they are just waiting for the life-giving rain. I dedicated my painting to these people, whom the rain means life itself.

One of my favourite places in the centre of Budapest. It is usually always full of people. Late at night, after the rain, there is no one anywhere, everything is quiet, clean and bright. I like this atmosphere.

In this work, I wanted to convey that Rain has not only destructive power when rivers overflow their banks and carry crushing power.

Rain also brings creative power. A tree growing in the desert, after the Rain, can come to life and leaves will bloom. Showing the whole world that Rain is such a creative and vital force that everything is possible.

I believe and I know that everything is possible!

In general, Rain is great!

Rain sweeps streets clean, scrubs sidewalks and buildings and lights until they shine. Rain brings a myriad of colors together in smudgy bright piles of light.

Here is a painting of a street in Chicago, USA during a rain storm. Lights smear, colors blend, magic happens in ways that only happen when it rains.

Visitors' Reviews

"Storm" is an oil piece that makes me feel optimistic. It's my favorite. Although it showcases the damage of inclement weather, it also shows the sky beginning to get brighter. It gives me a lot of hope.

"After the Rain" is another gem to me. It's a simple yet poignant piece that showcases the wonders of a landscape after intense rainfall. It shows the world beginning to pick up the pieces again. It's another piece of art that makes me feel motivated and excited about life.

People and Paintings is back with a brand new exhibition for May. This time the focus has shifted to everyone's favorite topic of small talk: the rain.

The beauty of this subject is that it gives artists a chance to truly embrace the power and impact of rainfall, both on the landscape and on the soul. Many pieces on show do this wonderfully. There are some beautifully captivating cityscapes, such as Lorincz's After Rain, while Prayer For Rain by Traxi is beautifully uplifting.

One thing that is undeniable about this exhibition, however, is the range of depictions, mediums, and voices. We get a chance to see what the rain means to artists across the world and see ourselves in the people watching it fall. It is surprisingly more joyful than melancholy, which makes it highly recommendable for a potentially moody May.

Curator's Note

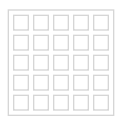

Thank you for your participation in this exhibition, "Rain". I viewed all submissions carefully, and selected 20 works for this themed show. Some outstanding paintings are simply applauded. The entire image, technique, colors, brush strokes, lines, composition.

I was pleased to have wonderful artworks in my show. I was also happy to receive some other works which followed the theme and showed meaningful descriptions. As a curator, I focus on the theme of each show. When an artwork performance along the theme, I evaluate it by its standards. I notice some artists don't mention any description about the work. I understand some people don't want to say anything about the art on purpose, or just being shy to say in English because it's not her/his own language. In my themed show, it's precious for me to hear a voice of each artist at least even with only a couple of words. Sometimes, I hear deeper meanings implied into an artwork, which I believe talks to viewers, too.

It's always my pleasure to run a juried exhibition. I am humbly grateful for your interest and submission works. My next show is coming in Autumn. Let's impress and inspire viewers with your great artworks together! See you soon again.

Sincerely, YUKAKO
